CONTINUING PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMMES

The School of Nursing, Midwifery and Public Health and the School of Allied Health Sciences offer a range of high-quality Continuing Professional Development (CPD) opportunities for individuals and organisations working within the Health and Care sector. All our courses are practice-based and impact-driven to support high quality teaching and learning, providing opportunities to improve health and care delivery in the region and beyond.

Our CPD portfolio is continually updated to respond quickly to national and local initiatives, and has been designed to be delivered in a flexible way with a range of delivery patterns including:

- Study days
- Bespoke programmes
- Fully accredited CPD modules and programmes of study at master's level
- Blended learning

All CPD courses offered are based on clinical delivery, requirements and research into your practice, and designed to affect a real and lasting practical impact on health and care delivery and improvement.

The University of Suffolk prides itself on offering a flexible portfolio of CPD provision, the following modules can be taken stand alone or as part of a qualificatory programme:
